SUMMARY

Colorado Springs Real Estate Market Update – February 2025

February brought some interesting shifts to the Colorado Springs housing market! Active listings saw a 39% increase, giving buyers more options, while new listings remained flat compared to the previous month.

On the sales side, closings were down 11%, signaling a bit of a slowdown but we believe the poor winter weather caused some of this. Home prices continued to rise, with the average sales price up 7% and the median price increasing 4%. This suggests that demand is still strong, especially for well-priced homes.

Another positive note for buyers: mortgage rates dipped by 0.2%, offering a bit of financial relief. While affordability remains a challenge, this small drop could help more buyers move forward with their home purchase plans.

As we head into spring, it will be interesting to see if inventory continues to build and how buyers and sellers respond to these market conditions.
